

I am going to tell you about how do I feel about my English classes both in Saturday School and in my high school.

In my English classes during the week I study different units for each exam, everything that we learn there I've learnt it before in Saturday School, so normally these classes are easy for me. We do some speakings and more activities. In Saturday School classes I learn new things every Saturday, so I think that these classes are better for me.

In my high school there are native speakers and some of them have been very good for us to learn English. They spend all the class speaking and interacting with us, so I learn a lot. Other native speakers haven't been that good, they only come to the class, read a book for us and don't do anything else.

I like studying English because I love learning languages and because I think that it would be very useful for me in the future. There are some things such as understanding what people say in a conversation or reading English books that are easy for me but others that are not. Speaking is very difficult for me because I am very shy and I get very nervous talking in front of people. Sometimes grammar is too, because I will understand it when someone explain it but then doing some parts of the B2 exam I don't know the word I should write or choose. These are things that I want to improve.

In conclusion, these are the differences between English classes in Saturday School and my high school, how native speakers work with us and what things are easier and more difficult for me.

Pilar, 16

B2-level class